

About the Authors

Jürgen Backhaus (JSD 1976, PhD 1985, The University of Constance) has served as the Professor of Public Economics at the University of Limburg in the Netherlands since 1986. His publications and research cover most areas of public finance.

Sir Richard Body, a member of Britain's parliament since 1966, operates a farm in Berkshire, England. He is a former Chairman of the House of Commons Select Committee on Agriculture. He is the author of three books on agriculture, and a vigorous critic of political measures which distort the market in the food-producing sector.

James L. Busey (Ph.D., Ohio State University) became Professor Emeritus of Political Science at the University of Colorado in 1980, having taught there since 1952. He has published five books and monographs on Latin American political systems, and has written articles, chapters and book reviews about Latin American and Canadian political systems. He has lectured in Mexico, New Zealand, Great Britain, Brazil and Canada, and has done research in Mexico, Central America, South America, the Caribbean, Portugal and Spain.

Fred Harrison (B.A., Oxford, M.Sc. University of London) is an investigative journalist who has been, since 1987, Director of the Centre for Incentive Taxation. He writes the Centre's newsletter, Economic Intelligence and is editor of the 96-year-old bi-monthly journal, Land and Liberty. He is a co-author of Critics of Henry George: A Centennial Appraisal (Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1979) and the author of The Power in the Land (Shepherd-Walwyn, 1983).

C. Lowell Harriss (Ph.D., Columbia University) is Professor Emeritus in economics at Columbia University and Senior Advisor of the Academy of Political Science. He is President of the Robert Schalkenbach Foundation. He taught economics at Columbia from 1938 until 1981, when he became Executive Director of the Academy of Policy Science. He was awarded the 1990 Distinguished Service Award in Economic Education by the Joint Council on Economic Education and the National Association of Economic Educators.

Jerome F. Heavey (Ph.D., Pennsylvania State University) teaches economics at Lafayette College, is a member of the editorial board of the American Journal of Economics and Sociology, and is at work on a history of the pre-independence Irish land reform. He sees himself as 'one of the larger winners from state lotteries,' having written his doctoral dissertation on the subject.

Jacob Jan Krabbe studied economics at the NEH in Rotterdam, now Erasmus University. After graduating, he was appointed to the staff of Wageningen Agricultural University, where he now serves as associate professor [universitair hoofddocent]. He teaches economic theory, environmental economics and history of economic thought.

Richard Noyes has been editor and publisher of weekly newspapers in New Hampshire communities (Monadnock Ledger, Salem Observer) since 1956. He was an elected delegate to two Constitutional Conventions in that state (16th, 1974, and 17th, 1984). He is President of the International Union for Land Value Taxation and Free Trade. He wrote At The Edge of Megalopolis: A history of Salem, N.H., 1900-1974.

David Richards (M.A., Oxford) is senior researcher with the Economic and Social Science Research Association, London. He supervised a major portion of the research for Costing the Earth (London: Shephard-Walwyn, 1989), and is engaged in a major research project applying Georgist economics to environmental issues.

Francis M. Smith (Ph.D.), now a business consultant, made his career as a colour chemist. He was technical director in a multi-national chemical company and President of both the Paint Research Association and the Oil and Colour Chemists' Association. As a consultant, he assists in the search for new inventions for long-term investment, and runs nursery workshops for the unemployed in down-town East Manchester.

T. Nicolaus Tideman (Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1969) is Professor of Economics at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, where he has taught since 1975. He was visiting professor of economics at the University of Buckingham, England, 1985-86. He taught economics at Harvard 1969 to 1973, during which time he was a senior staff economist on the President's Council of Economic Advisors.
