Manufacturer Left Fund to Carry On Henry George's Theory

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEWARK, N. J., March 7—The income from the net estate of John Hayes Allen of Orange, president of the Everlasting Valve Company of Jersey City, who died last Feb. 18, will be applied toward the propagation of Henry George's single-tax theories, according to the will that was probated in the Surrogate's Office here today. The net estate is valued between $150,000 and $200,000.

The will specified that the income was to be used for "educational purposes to spread knowledge of the principles of taxation and economics, commonly known as the doctrine of Single Tax, as told and explained by the late Henry George," but specifically enjoined the trustees from "carrying on propaganda or influencing legislation."

The trustees are Cecil Davey of Roselle Park and Borden D. Whiting of West Orange, vice president and counsel and secretary, respectively, of the Everlasting Valve Company.
