on account of the general prosperity, we know that the powers of monopoly wield a greater power here than ever before, and that if political democracy is to endure we must achieve economic democracy as well.

The present situation seems to me to call for a new crusade which will boldly raise the banner of economic justice at the polls, where it will receive wider attention than by any other method.

Therefore, although I am interested in and sympathetic with all sincere efforts for our cause, I returned home more in favor of the Commonwealth Land Party than ever.

SPEECH OF JOSEPH DANA MILLER

Mr. Miller reviewed his impressions of the three inspiring days at the Henry George Congress in Philadelphia. He spoke of the fine spirit of harmony that prevailed there and the many admirable speeches delivered. He paid a high tribute to the men who had called the Congress together.

He said, "Of course we will continue to differ as to methods. Individuals will prefer to work in their own way, and groups will amalgamate for the work which seems to them the most practicable or the most important at the minute. That is inevitable. But it may be done without discord and with that personal affection that should exist between men and women animated by a common aim in so great a cause."

Mr. Miller pointed out that Robert Schalkenbach, with the cooperation of Frederic Leubuscher, selected as the board of trustees to administer the fund for Single Tax work men of various shades of Single Tax opinion. "And," said Mr. Miller, "I violate no confidence in saying that despite differences of opinion we are getting along very nicely. We are working out our agreements."

Mr. Miller paid a tribute to the late Robert Schalkenbach and asked that his spirit of love and gentleness continue to animate our labors. In conclusion he said, "I plead for the broadest spirit of toleration in the work that lies before us."

SPEECH OF ROBERT C. MACAULEY

Mr. Macauley made a vigorous presentation of the Single Tax. He reiterated his faith in independent political party activity but spoke tolerantly of those who differed with him. He said this might seem strange coming from Bob Macauley, for he had inherited a fighting instinct from his Irish ancestry. But he was going to do his own work in his own way, and not bother about the other fellow and the work he was doing.

Few men have the ability to present our cause more forcibly than Robert C. Macauley, and his speech on this occasion was well received. It was not thrown away, for there were a number of non-Single Taxers in the audience, some of whom heard the militant expression of our principles for the first time.

SPEECH OF GRACE ISABEL COLBRON

Miss Colbron said that she would tell little of the Conference itself as that had been taken care of by others. But she would prefer to take the time to tell of important developments along economic lines which made Denmark a peculiarly fitting place for this Conference. Denmark, Miss Colbron said (and she speaks from thorough knowledge of that country) takes its Henry George straight. There has been no dallying with the idea of land nationalization or communalization, a pet theory of some Single Taxers in England and Germany for instance. Even when Denmark got the land back to the farmer and set him on his feet by making farming pay, there was no talk of land nationalization. It was a business proposition entirely. The Government bought land (landlord compensation, of course, but that was some years ago) and sold it to the farmers on easy terms.

Now that the Danish farmer, in the overwhelming majority, is a free man on his own land, he knows that if he still has some economic troubles "land nationalization" isn't going to help. He looks about for another cause and another remedy. And the Danish "small-holders," farmers working anywhere from five to fifteen acres of land, form the great majority of "Georgists" in Denmark. He is an individualist, this Danish farmer. He comes of a race of sea-rovers, and the sea-rover, the pioneer, is the man who goes it alone. His splendid team-work in the Co-operatives has not been handed out to him by a paternalistic government. He found the idea himself, as the best way to run his business. So that, with such a people back of them, even the half-way measures now going through the legislature in the matter of taking land value taxes for local needs, can be of importance as the opening wedge to better things.

The Georgist movement in Denmark, from the composition of its adherents, and from the nature of the people, is of the greatest possible value to the movement everywhere. Miss Colbron said that, to her mind, Denmark would be the ideal center of any movement for an International Union, as the Danes are the only really internationally-minded people she knows. They have no imperialistic ambitions and they are setting the whole world an example of sane nationalism which means merely setting one's own house in order while keeping an open mind for whatever the rest of the world has to offer.

SPEECH OF LE BARON GOELLER.

"I like the idea of taking a text for my talk, and I find that the ministers have an excellent reason for selecting a text for a sermon, as it concentrates the attention on the one thought to be put forward.

"I take my text from the Gospel of Single Tax, according to Croasdale, 'A Single Taxer is one who does something for the Single Tax.'

"Notice carefully what this says;—it says to 'do something.' And that something may be much or little, the main thing being that we should do all we can.

"Sometimes we may be a little doubtful as to the value of what we are doing so I will read a few lines from Browning:—'There is no first nor last'—there is no great or small.

"All service ranks the same with God:
If now, as formerly, He trod
Paradise, His presence fills
Our earth, each only as God wills
Can work—God's puppets, best and worst,
Are we; there is no last nor first.

"Say not a small event. Why "small"? Costs it more pain, this, ye call A "great event," should come to pass, Than that? Untwine me from the mass Of deeds which make up life, nor deed Power shall fall short in or exceed!"

"From my earliest youth I seem to have been something of a Hero worshipper, and, perhaps am in danger of having too much veneration for certain people.

"My first hero was my father. I thought he knew everything. And whenever I asked him a question I received an intelligent answer. He never deceived me, and his fellow workmen called him the walking encyclopedia. And the final proof to me of his intelligence was that he was a Henry George man.

"My second hero was Henry George, the greatest philosopher in the world. 'Progress and Poverty' was the greatest book and I read it through twice before I was 20 years old.

"I was present in April 1910 at a meeting of men, called together in a hotel in Manhattan, to send out a call to establish a Single Tax Party. A person might ask what benefit I, or the cause had received from party activity.

"I ran for Treasurer of New York State in 1914 but didn't get much publicity. But in 1924 when I ran for Lieutenant Governor I obtained many columns of space and got in long articles that were pure propaganda. Most of all, personally, it gave me a prestige that no other form of propaganda had ever done. Before a person can get speaking dates he must have attained to considerable eminence. And the party backing surely looks big. So partly on account of this, and offering services free, I secured a date at Syracuse University, to speak before the Department of Economics. I had about 50 minutes for presentation and was allowed 20 minutes for questions, had the very closest attention from all, and expect to go back again some time.

"The only startling thing that occurred there was that the Professor of Political Science attacked my definition of science when I based it on natural law. He declared that natural law was a mere figment of the imagination and was not a fact. He declared that we believe simply what we want to believe. This seems to be a modification of the philosophy of Immanuel Kant, brought up to date. It is evidently based on the modern conception of matter, molecular, atomic, electron theory, which resolves the universe into some kind of an unreal mental conception of human beings. Natural law, they say, is subjective, that is it exists only in the mind of the speaker. But anyone can clearly see that natural law (that is, the orderly regular processes or sequences of nature) is objective, and has nothing to do with the creature that observes the phenomena. This is clearly shown by Sir Oliver Lodge in his recent book on 'Relativity.'

"The philosophy that natural law is subjective is a very convenient attitude of mind because you do not have to really understand a subject, for you believe what you desire to believe. And it is very convenient morally because you cannot say that Single Tax is right or wrong; you are a 'Single Taxer because you want to be.' It looks as if it were the outcome of a system of cramming in the colleges where the students are rushed through much faster than they can thoughtfully master their subjects, thus forcing them to use their memory (without thought) in order to remember what the professor said, and get through the examination. The students graduate in a bewildered state of mind rather than with convictions of any kind. They become agnostic on all subjects. In fact a superintendent of schools of Endicott once said to the scholars that all that we can know 'is the last say of the last professor.' Such minds, as Mark Twain put it, 'have been reduced to an ineffectual mush through idiotic training."

Mr. Goeller closed with the reading of the following parody on Kipling's "Vampire" by Bert Leach. So well was this delivered, for Mr. Goeller is a finished elocutionist, that it was a treat to hear him.

A fool there was, and he cast his vote
(Even as you and I.)
For ragged pants and a ragged coat
And some grub on which he didn't dote;
He voted for G. O. P., you'll note.
(Even as you and I.)

Oh, the work we do for the favored few, And the miserable wage we get! We crack the nuts, and they take the meat, They hand us the chaff, and they take the wheat, And to make our bondage more complete We vote for this system yet.

A fool there was, and he goods had none.

(Even as you and I.)

He worked all day, from sun to sun,
He had no cash, so he worked for fun,
And he voted as his dad had done.

(Even as you and I.)

Oh, he worked like fun from sun to sun, And he plotted and schemed and planned. But he just could not make both ends meet. If his head kept warm, then he froze his feet, And his kids hadn't enough to eat. But he couldn't understand.

The fool was stripped to his foolish hide.

(Even as you and I.)

They couldn't use that, though they may have tried,
And his legs lived on, though his head had died.

(Even as you and I.)

It isn't the shame and it isn't the blame That stings like a white-hot brand; It's the cussed foolishness of a jay Who'll work ten hours for two hours pay And vote for the thing on election day And will not understand.

The hour was growing late at the conclusion of Mr. Goeller's remarks, but Chairman Tracy called on George E. Evans, president of the Henry George Foundation, to say a few words on the new national organization. It had been the chairman's intention to call on Mrs. deMille and Mr. Hennessy for a few words but the length of the programme precluded this, much to the disappointment of many present. But it can be said that this dinner was one of the most successful ever held under the auspices of the Commonwealth Land Party of New York.

The following cablegram was received from the Commonwealth Land Party of England.

"Join heartily in appreciation of your honored guest, Miss. Schetter, hoping her vigorous uncompromising faith in Georgism may inspire us until complete economic emancipation is the only live issue everywhere."

No wonder corporations raise great slush funds; in nearly every state there are two bureaus—one to tax them, the other to regulate them. Get rid of the multiple tax system and commissions and we will also get rid of corrupt politics.

The Henry George Foundation Begins Work

I T has not taken long for the Henry George Foundation to get down to real work. The officers have let no grass grow under their feet since the organization meeting in Philadelphia on September 2, 3 and 4. They have begun with an intensive movement for as complete an enrollment of the Single Taxers of the nation as is possible to secure.

Here are a few of the specific activities outlined in a circular recently sent out:

Organization of local Henry George Clubs on a national

Establishment of a national lecture service that will reinforce the good work now being done in this line.

Printing and distribution of pamphlets.

Extending the circulation of Single Tax periodicals.

Development of an Economic Research Bureau to gather and furnish information on the production and distribution of wealth.

Furnish expert service on taxation and assessments; inviting the submission of local problems.

Establishment of a central clearing house for Single Tax information and societies with a view to greater coordination of efforts for the advancement of the movement.

Hundreds of letters have been received endorsing the Foundation and promising support from such men as Frederic C. Howe, Darwin D. Martin, Whidden Graham, Frederick H. Monroe, Emil O. Jorgensen, John F. Dalrymple, F. B. Hamlin, James H. Barry, James Malcolm,
